The Board of Health has issued a circular of instructions for the benefit of persons who are exposed to the heat, advising that they abstais from all stimulants, wear thin clothing, open the doors and windows of their sleeping-rooms, avoid loss of sleep and all unnecessary fatigue, and if employed indoors in artificial heat, as in laundries, bakeries and the like, see that their working rooms are well ventilated.

QUADRUPEDS SUFFER AS MUCH AS STREED.

The disastrous effects of the heat are illustrated in the fact that though the Third Avenue Surface Railway Company had relays of horses stationed every few blocks slong the line, no less than thirty-six horses died from insolation yesterday, and more than three hundred animals are now in the hospital stable.

Even the animals at Central Park suffered. It was necessary to remove the lions and tigers—natives of the torrid sone—from the outdoor cages into their Winter quarters, and the poor polar hears exolted much sympathy as they lay in their cave, panting their mouths wide open their tongues hanging out and their eyes the picture of woe.

All manner of devices have been resorted to by the people to except the sweitering heat. Thousands of people slept on the roofs last night, and hundreds of men, forsaking their beds in the pent-up rooms of their usual lodging places, sprawled out on park benches or in the area-way, bent on getting any breath of air that might be stirring.

The free baths have been thronged with bathers those three days, and it is safe to say that 100,000 people have taken a plunge during this hot spell.

BUSINESS AFFROTED.

BUSINESS AFFROYED. Business in the shopping districts has been brought almost to a standstill by the insuferable heat, while the capacity of the various lines of excursion boats has been taxed to the utmost by the thousands of people who have sought to escape from the city for a such day.

The drinking founts of the Moderation Society have been surrounded by swellering citizons.

It is many years since the city has experienced a season of such excessive heat for four days in succession, and its effects will be felt for many weeks in debilitation.

It was in this village that as a boy he first met Horace Greeiey, and a friendship was comented that lasted nearly fifty years. At that time the two lads were in the employ of Amos Bliss, who owned a general country store and conducted a country newspaper called the Fermont Spectator. Mr. Jones was employed as a clerk and errand boy in the store and Greeley was an apprentice in the composing-room of the paper.

The father and mother of Mr. Jones died when he was thirteen years old and he was thrown on his own resources. He worked at whatever promised an honorable livelihood until in 1838 he came to this city, when he again fell across Horace Greeley, who was working at his occupation of printer.

When Greeley started the New York Tribune in 1841, he proposed to Mr. Jones to go into the enterprise with him. Mr. Jones declined to do this because he did not like Greeley's business methods.

Later Mr. Jones went into the business office of the Tribune and there became acquainted with Henry J. Raymond, Greeley's assistant. From their first meeting Raymond commanded Mr. Jones's warmest admiration and esteem.

Even on the sunburned streets it is cooler to-day. At noon Perry's thermometer in the Pulitzer Building marked but 83 degrees, while Hudnut's in lower Broadway recorded 82.

Workers in the sun should wear light hats, light in material and light in color, for dark colors attract and absorb heat. Put in the hat on the head a wet cloth. Wet it now askit then as it gots dry.

Keep the body in a perspiration, drinking water enough for that purpose, for perspiration keeps the body from getting overheated, and the first sympton of sunstruke is a drynness of the skin. Carry an umbrella when walking, and seek shade, if possible, while at work.
